QSTATION
Sydney Harbour National Park - Manly

OUR STORY

then...

The rocky promontory of North Head at the entrance to Sydney Harbour was an important place to the Traditional Custodians. Today, the fresh water bubbling up through the sandstone, the stunning vistas, native bush, animals, and rich sea life gives visitors a sense of this. It is said that it was the Gayamaygal people who witnessed the arrival of the first fleet ships from one of the nearby coves where they went to meet the newcomers from across the seas.

With the establishment of the Sydney settlement, the North Head was used to isolate people suspected of carrying infectious disease, mostly arriving on migrant ships. From the first quarantine of convict transport the Bussorah Merchant on the beach at Spring Cove in 1828, the site has undergone many changes. Officially set aside in 1834 as a Quarantine Station, with detainees housed in tents, eventually the needs of the site became clearer and permanent buildings were constructed in separate areas for the healthy and the sick. By the 1880s the site expanded with internees housed in precincts segregated along class and racial lines.

Outbreaks of smallpox in 1881, and bubonic plague in 1900, brought Sydneysiders to quarantine, some who were taken forcibly from their home at a moment's notice to the Station which was ill equipped to handle the big influx of people. After Federation, the Quarantine Station's facilities were upgraded, new buildings built and state-of-the-art disinfection technology introduced - much of which is still in place today.

During the Spanish Influenza pandemic of 1918-19, at the end of WWI, twelve thousand people were detained - this was the busiest time in the Quarantine Station's history.

From 1920 until the closure of the Quarantine Station in 1984, there were only two recorded deaths on-site, neither from infectious disease. Changes in medical treatment and transport resulted in the site not being needed for quarantine of infectious diseases. But, it was used for other purposes. When Cyclone Tracy hit Darwin on Christmas, 1974, hundreds of people were evacuated to Sydney with many housed at the Station until it was safe for them to return home.

In 1975, with the fall of Saigon, children were air-lifted from Vietnam to Australia, Canada, France and the USA. One hundred and fifty of these children came to the Quarantine Station, where they slept on mattresses on the floor in the former hospital building, played on the beach and were cared for by volunteers while waiting to meet up with their adoptive families. Also, from 1959 - 1974, the former staff dining room, reinforced with bars on the windows, was used as an Immigration Detention Facility, where men were held awaiting deportation for lack of visas.

...and now

With its closure in 1984, the Quarantine Station site was handed over to the National Parks & Wildlife Service and is currently leased to Mawland Group who has re-purposed it as Q Station - a hotel, conference and event centre. On the NSW and National Heritage lists, the site with its 65 original buildings set on 30 hectares overlooking Sydney Harbour is home to an array of protected wildlife, including little penguins, long-nosed bandicoots, the eastern suburbs banksia scrub and the creatures of the North Harbour Aquatic Reserve. Packed with history, a beautiful landscape and much to discover, Q Station offers an exceptional environment for learning.

SECONDARY PROGRAMS

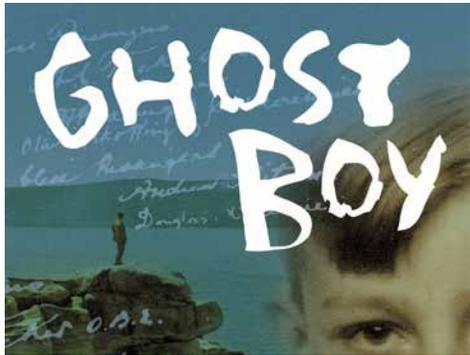

Education Programs at Q Station provide engaging learning experiences in an ever-evolving historically and geographically significant context. Themes of life and death, sickness and health, class, gender, race, hopes and fears all come into focus in the amazing natural landscape of North Head.

Activities are designed to develop critical, creative and reflective thinking skills.

Exploration of the natural and built environment,
handling artefacts,
interacting with primary sources,
and hearing stories fosters empathy with the past and ongoing consideration of how the site has been valued by different constituencies throughout its history.

All of our education programs have significant links to the NSW and Australian National Curriculum across multiple subject areas but they are also customisable for particular interests or projects. Contact our Education Program Manager about your goals for the visit!

GHOST BOY

bring the book to life!

Inspired by the book written by Felicity Pulman, the Ghost Boy program brings the story to life. Students journey through the Quarantine Station to learn about the differences between Tad's world of the 1880s smallpox epidemic and their own, as revealed through the character of Froggy, as he meets up with the ghost of his ancestor at the Station.

Students visit key locations, referencing the text, and participate in a number of activities which challenge them to think about how things have changed from Tad's time to their own, to consider issues of migration, class, race and identity; and to reflect upon changing attitudes about sickness and death. Ghost Boy includes the Making Your Mark activity. Other activities can be substituted, or added (at a cost of $2.50 per student).

Details:

- Suitable for years 7 - 9
- Subject area: English and History
- Program duration: 2 - 2.5 hours
- Capacity: 15 - 175 students
- Price per student: $17.50

40 DAYS

what if you were quarantined?

The original length of time people were quarantined was 40 days. This interactive experience asks the question, "What would happen if you were quarantined tomorrow?"

The program focuses on the busiest period in the Quarantine Station's history, when it was confronted with the Spanish Influenza epidemic of 1918-1919. Students participate in activities to explore the quarantine processes undertaken by the passengers of the RMS Niagara. This program allows a direct comparison between medical technologies of 1918 and the present; students consider the evolution in communication technologies; reflect on changing attitudes about class and race; and contemplate the differences in freedoms and rights expected by citizens today, all whilst engaging their dramatic abilities through role play.

Details:

- Suitable for stages 4 - 5
- Program duration: 2 hours
- Capacity: 15 - 100 students
- Price per student: $17.50

QUARANTINE STATION SITE STUDY

investigating changes over time

The Quarantine Station Site Study reveals the historical phases and changes of the site throughout its history. Exploration of the built environment and investigation of artefacts, primary and secondary sources allows students to practice historical inquiry, use historical language and locate, select & organise information in the context of this evocative place. Sites Studies are compulsory for the Stage 4 and 5 NSW History syllabus.

The Site Study can be modified to focus on particular areas of interest or extended to include a focused 30 minute Quarantine Station Case Study (at a cost of $2.50 per student) on the following:

- Operation Babylift, 1974
- Immigration Detention at the Station, 1960-1970s

Details:

- Suitable for stages 4 - 6
- Subject area: History (with links to Science and Geography)
- Program duration: 2.5 hours

SITE INVESTIGATION

investigation of historic sites and sources

Stage 6/ Modern History: Investigating Modern History – The Nature of Modern History

Students undertake a close study of the site, its stories, artefacts, the built environment, primary and secondary sources to apply their skills of historical inquiry and to consider the interplay of historical evidence, argument, interpretation, memory, intuition and bias. Changing phases of the site provide a microcosm of the development of Contemporary Australia. From a close study of the site, students develop a more refined analysis and interpretation of the broader developments that shaped the site, and an increased empathy for how those developments affected people who were here, as well as a deeper appreciation for the interplay between the individual, the community, the environment, politics, judgement, and differing perspectives that shape the world today. The Quarantine Station is suggested as a site to investigate in the NSW Modern History Curriculum and a chapter is dedicated to the site in Modern History Transformed by Cambridge University Press - The Investigation of Historical Sites and Sources: Death, Disease and Division: The Quarantine Station. The Quarantine Station Site Study program has links to the Australian and NSW curriculum areas.

THE SEARCH FOR BETTER HEALTH

changes in thinking about medicine

This program is designed to compliment HSC Biology and links with the Australian Curriculum units of Science as a Human Endeavour. Using the Quarantine Station as a case study, students are given a historical context to further their understanding of the causes of infectious disease and investigate the evolution in medical thinking and practice from the 19th century to the present as reflected in the Station's facilities and history. The Spanish Influenza pandemic of 1918 which was the busiest time on-site and many of our buildings date from this era becomes a focus for the visit to compare prior and subsequent thinking about infectious disease. Students interact with a timeline of medical thinking from the 14th Century to present day, and discuss infectious diseases, theories about them, their transmission and treatment as experienced at the Quarantine Station. Students participate in activities focusing on medical history, diagnosing disease, and the immune response. The Search For Better Health program has links to the Australian and NSW curriculum areas.

Immigration Detention at the Station - Case Study

A migration experience of people who came to Australia without necessary visas or over-stayed them and who were detained at the Quarantine Station in the 1960-70s. Writings on the wall (in a number of languages) in the building where the detainees were held reveal how they felt about the experience.

For stages 5 & 6

Operation Baby Lift - Case Study

A migration experience of orphans who were air-lifted from Saigon to Australia during the Vietnam War and came to the Quarantine Station before meeting their adoptive families. Links to Stage 3 History: Australia as a Nation.

For stages 5 & 6

EXTRAS & ECOHOPPER

Stay after your Education Program and enjoy the Wharf Precinct with our lovely harbourside Quarantine Beach and the Luggage Store Visitor Centre with a free historical exhibition, gift shop, and café. Picnic on the beach and participate in our old-fashioned games like quoits and skipping ropes.

We encourage schools to make use of the EcoHopper ferry that comes directly to Q Station Wharf six times daily with stops at Circular Quay, Eastern Suburbs, Taronga Zoo and Manly. Providing convenient access to our site, it also extends the quarantine experience giving students a greater sense of the location in Sydney Harbour; the rocky cliffs of North Head. They experience what it might have been like to arrive or leave the station as most migrants would have and see for themselves why the site was chosen as a place of quarantine for ships coming from overseas. Bookings are necessary and special rates are available for school groups. Visit www.sydneyharbourecohopper.com.au or call 02 9538 1199 for all bookings and enquiries.
